

Preface

This monograph is the contribution of the Institute for Human Rights and Development in Africa (IHRDA) to the review project of the African Human Security Initiative (AHSI).

The monograph has benefited from the collaborative effort of many people and institutions. The IHRDA is responsible for the choice of commitments and indicators in the field of human rights, as well as for developing the concepts and methods needed in order to conduct the review. The Institute would like to thank all of those who assisted with this study, including organisations visited during country visits, organisations with informative websites and publications, and others with whom we corresponded via phone and email. In particular, thanks are extended to the other AHSI partners for their input; and to the British Department for International Development (DFID) for funding the project.

An abridged version of this report, in both French and English, has been published separately as a paper by the AHSI. The paper, titled “African commitments to human rights: A review of eight New Partnership for Africa’s Development (NEPAD) countries”, is available on the AHSI website: www.africanreview.org